If the term employment is used in its wider sense as meaning work which is of economic value not only to the family but to the community, women have at all times been thus employed. In primitive societies and in agricultural communities women shared in the productive work on the land, in the workshops and the home; they took part in trade and they cared for the old, the sick and the infirm at a time when there were no health and welfare services in the modern sense. Indeed, in any society in which the productivity of labour is low, women's active participation in the daily work is indispensable. To this day, women work in the fields in all agricultural communities; they spin and weave, do building work and various other kinds of hard physical labour in many parts of the world which have not yet reached the threshold of industrialisation.

57. According to the passage, if we use the word 'employment' in its general meaning ---- .

- A) we are referring to early domestic industries
- B) it refers almost wholly to the activities of women
- C) it signifies any kind of work which contributes economically to society
- D) it primarily signifies low paid or unpaid working activities
- E) it stands for all kinds of work in an agricultural society

58. The author points out that, historically, women ---- .

- A) have played a pioneering role in the growth of industrialisation
- B) have been involved in domestic activities but not in outdoor ones
- C) have never been regarded as economically useful
- D) have never been expected to do hard physical work
- E) have always played an important part in the communities' working activities

59. The passage points out that, in this present age, in many underdeveloped countries, ---- .

- A) health care and other social services are starting to be more effective
- B) women are still being used in physically demanding jobs
- C) it is still the women's responsibility to carry on trading activities
- D) spinning and weaving are the only major economic activities
- E) child labour is no longer practised

If you wish to glimpse the ancient trophies of Pedra Furada, in a difficult, mountainous area of north-eastern Brazil, you must be prepared to face intense dry heat, treacherous rocky ground, sudden flooding, boulders falling from cliffs, aggressive snakes and swarms of mosquitoes. It's worth it, though, for the archaeological treasures to be found there are exceptionally ancient. Rock paintings - vivid depictions of prehistoric ways of life, including dancing, hunting, war and sex rituals - have been dated at more than 12,000 years old, while curious pebble structures, primeval bonfires and early stone tools are up to 50,000 years old. The discovery of the remains had a profound effect on our knowledge of American prehistory, for they suggested that the first people in the New World arrived not via a bridge of ice from Siberia but by sea from Africa or possibly even Australia.

60. It is pointed out in the passage that Pedra Furada ---- .

- A) is jealously guarded and few people are allowed to see its treasures
- B) is situated in an extremely hostile environment
- C) is just one of many archaeological sites in north-eastern Brazil
- D) has rock paintings depicting activities of 50,000 years ago
- E) is easily accessible, especially during the summer months

61. We can understand from the passage that the rock paintings in Pedra Furada ---- .

- A) depict a wide variety of activity in prehistorical Brazil
- B) are far older than any of the other archaeological trophies there
- C) have been blackened by the smoke from primeval bonfires
- D) are in a bad state of repair owing to the dry climate
- E) are of less interest than the early stone tools found there

62. We can understand from the passage that, before the ancient trophies of Pedra Furada came to light, ---- .

- A) people presumed that north-eastern Brazil had never been inhabited
- B) people believed that the first inhabitants of the American continents came either from Africa or from Australia
- C) it had always been assumed that the first people in the New World came from Siberia over a bridge of ice
- D) this area was already attracting tourists
- E) no one even suspected that the rituals of dancing and hunting went back 12,000 years

New evidence suggests that Noah's flood really did happen. A recent expedition has confirmed that a huge flood occurred 7,000 years ago in the Black Sea. The theory was first put forward last year by marine geologists William Ryan and Walter Pitman. In their book Noah's Flood, they argue that the great flood resulted from the last ice age, which peaked 12,000 years ago. When the poles froze, ocean levels dropped and cut off the Mediterranean from the Black Sea, which dropped 150 m to become a lake with fertile shores. When the ice thawed, the Mediterranean rose back up and broke through what is now known as the Bosphorus with a force equal to 200 Niagara Falls for a period of two years. The Black Sea rose, consuming a mile of shore a day. Those who had settled there fled, spreading their stories of the flood.

63. According to the passage, the poles froze during the last ice age which caused ocean levels to drop and ---- .

- A) remain low for the next 7,000 years
- B) the Mediterranean became a lake only 150 m deep
- C) and they never again returned to normal
- D) so no further flooding on such a scale is likely
- E) the Mediterranean was separated from the Black Sea

64. It is pointed out in the passage that, as the ice melted towards the end of the last ice age, ---- .

- A) the waters of the Mediterranean rose and forced a way through to the Black Sea
- B) the people living along the Bosphorus moved inland to avoid flooding
- C) several new seas came into being including the Mediterranean and the Black Sea
- D) the Mediterranean and the Black Sea once more became a unified ocean
- E) there was considerable flooding though it was not on the scale of that known as Noah's flood

65. It is suggested in the passage that the Black Sea flooded the land around it ---- .

- A) when it was cut off from the Mediterranean
- B) and so the Bosphorus was formed
- C) until all the ice at the poles had thawed
- D) when the last ice age peaked 12,000 years ago
- E) at the rate of a mile a day

Mr Mellon senior was a Croesus whose golden touch gave him a grip on much of American industry, including power, mining, civil engineering and insurance. His son, Paul Mellon, was a very different sort of person but no less remarkable. His achievement was that he managed to dispose of more money and goods than any other American of his time, but did it in an unobtrusive and well-regarded way. The great capitalists of the 19th century, particularly Andrew Carnegie and John Rockefeller, pioneered American philanthropy. Carnegie said the same aggressive energy that had made a capitalist rich should be employed to return his profits to society. The man who died rich, died disgraced, Carnegie thundered. Without necessarily agreeing with such structures, Paul Mellon set out to redistribute some of his wealth. Both men thought that what America needed was culture. Carnegie had favoured public libraries. Mr Mellon went for public art galleries.

66. The writer makes the point that Mellon senior made the money and that Mellon junior disposed of it, ---- .

- A) so it is Mellon senior who is to be admired
- B) but that the achievement of each was equally great
- C) which accounts for the tension between the two men
- D) but that both men were primarily interested in culture
- E) he is therefore very critical of Mellon junior's behaviour

67. As we understand from the passage, Carnegie passionately believed that ---- .

- A) his father ought to have been more philanthropic
- B) the capitalist system was wrong
- C) the best expression of a nation's culture was its art galleries
- D) the same energy that makes a man rich should be used for the benefit of society
- E) Rockefeller was the first and the greatest of the American philanthropists

68. The writer admires Paul Mellon because he used his father's money ---- .

- A) in a discrete manner, for the benefit of the American people at large
- B) and he had the same business skills as his father but refused to use them
- C) to make those who had worked for his father rich
- D) to set up new businesses and increase his wealth
- E) rather more extravagantly than even Carnegie had ever done

Venice is famed for its architecture and for its paintings. Venetian architecture reflects the Byzantine influence, though Gothic became the main style in the 14th century; and the first Renaissance building dates from the second half of the 15th century. The Venetian school of painters did not come into prominence until the 15th century. The best known of this school are Gentile and Giovanni Bellini, Titian, Tintoretto and Veronese. The centre of Venetian life is St Mark's square, which is paved with marble. Round this and the adjoining Piazzetta are grouped buildings of great beauty and interest. At the eastern end of the square is the basilica of St Mark, a fitting cathedral for the patriarch of Venice.

69. The author points out that Venetian architecture ---- .

- A) makes use of marble as the main building material
- B) is best represented by the basilica of St Mark
- C) actually reflects two different architectural styles prior to the Renaissance
- D) has remained almost unchanged since the 15th century
- E) has been an important source of inspiration for Venetian painters

70. We understand from the passage that prior to the 15th century, Venice ---- .

- A) could show no examples of buildings in the Gothic style
- B) was not influenced in any way by Byzantine architecture
- C) was already famous for its great painters and architects
- D) was already proud of her Renaissance buildings
- E) hardly produced any painters of importance

71. It is stressed in the passage that St Mark's square in Venice ---- .

- A) stands next to the Piazzetta, which architecturally has been neglected
- B) is dominated by buildings in the Gothic style
- C) was frequently painted by the Venetian school of painters
- D) is both the cultural and the social centre of the city
- E) is surrounded by buildings which house the works of Titian and other great Venetian painters

Radical changes in the life of western society were brought about by the new technical inventions of the 18th and 19th centuries which resulted in a gradual but complete reorganisation of the productive process. This is generally known as 'the Industrial Revolution'. The outstanding feature of this industrial revolution was the increasing specialisation of labour and, with it, the removal of more and more industries from the home to the factory. At the same time, a growing number of activities such as baking, soap making and dressmaking were taken over by industry. These changes profoundly affected the lives of women. Many of them worked in the new factories for very low wages and for excessively long hours; others worked at home for manufacturers.

72. According to the passage, the 18th and 19th centuries in the West ---- .

- A) were a time when working conditions were greatly improved
- B) domestic industry developed alongside the reorganisation of industry
- C) experienced a great economic and industrial decline
- D) saw great technical advances which led to radical changes in the production process
- E) gave priority to domestic industries

73. It is pointed out in the passage that one of the most important changes introduced by the Industrial Revolution was ---- .

- A) the development of such domestic skills as baking and soap making
- B) the improvement of the position of women in society
- C) the gradual rise of specialised labour
- D) the reorganisation of working conditions for women
- E) an unprecedented increase in wages

74. The writer makes the point that the Industrial Revolution ---- .

- A) had a totally destructive effect upon the social structure
- B) had a great effect on the way of life in the West
- C) encouraged domestic activities, in particular dressmaking
- D) led to the building of very many factories just for women workers
- E) had little effect on traditional production methods

Winchester is a cathedral city in England. Once a royal city and residence of the kings of Wessex, Winchester competed with London to be capital of England and rivalled Salisbury as a great centre of learning. The progressively intensified agricultural use of the land and the increasing population of the nearby towns and villages gave prosperity to Winchester and turned it into a major economic centre. Wool was an important local product, and its collection and distribution formed part of the city's economy. Under King Alfred, whose statue stands in the city, the cultural and ecclesiastical life of Winchester became firmly established.

75. The passage puts emphasis on ---- .

- A) the cultural and economic importance of Winchester in its early history
- B) King Alfred and how he made Winchester his capital
- C) London's supremacy over Winchester
- D) the architectural excellence of Winchester's cathedral
- E) the lives and deeds of the ancient kings of Wessex

76. The author explains that, in early times Winchester ---- .

- A) depended solely on the wool trade for her economy
- B) was a royal city for the Kings of England
- C) was hardly less important, in some respects, than either London or Salisbury
- D) sold most of her wool to London and Salisbury
- E) had a small population compared with surrounding areas

77. According to the passage, it was King Alfred ---- .

- A) who encouraged the growth of towns and villages in the Winchester region
- B) himself who had his statue set up in Winchester
- C) who made Winchester the capital of England
- D) who first had the idea of building a great cathedral in Winchester
- E) who turned Winchester into a cultural and ecclesiastical centre

George Vancouver was a British naval explorer who served as a seaman on Captain Cook's second voyage round the world (1772-75) and as a midshipman on his third voyage (1776-80). He then saw service in the West Indies. In 1791 he was placed in charge of an expedition to the northwest coast of North America to seek for a passage to the interior of the continent which was rumoured to exist in those parts. On the outward voyage by the Cape of Good Hope, a portion of the southwest coastline of Australia was examined, and Tasmania, New Zealand and Hawaii were visited. Vancouver spent three years in carefully surveying portions of the west coast of North America. He was the first to circumnavigate Vancouver Island, to which his name was given by the Spaniards to commemorate his achievement. The standard of his survey was exceptionally high and worthy of his old captain, James Cook; and his voyage practically disproved the existence of a water-passage to the interior along these coasts.

78. According to the passage, by the time George Vancouver was sent to explore the northwest coast of North America, ---- .

- A) he had led an exploratory expedition to the West Indies
- B) he had already had considerable experience at sea
- C) Captain Cook had already instructed him on what to look for
- D) he had already acquired a basic knowledge of the area with Captain Cook
- E) others had tried to find a sea passage into the interior but had failed

79. According to the passage, Vancouver's exploration of the northwest coast of America ---- .

- A) caused the Spaniards to give up their claims to North America
- B) was greatly admired by English sailors who named Vancouver Island after him
- C) brought to a successful end the explorations initiated by Captain Cook
- D) more or less established that there was no water-passage into the interior
- E) was more successful than any expedition he had taken part in

80. It is pointed out in the passage that Vancouver ---- .

- A) made a thorough survey of the western shore of North America
- B) wanted to be recognised as a greater explorer than Captain Cook
- C) was clearly feared by Spanish sailors
- D) was only interested in the exploration of North America and paid no attention to other territories
- E) bought supplies for his ship and crew in Australia on his voyage home
